

DISTINCTION FROM PRIOR ART

The cargo pant thigh holster system, as described in claims 6 and 7 is distinct from prior art in that it is a system of a collaboration of parts, specifically a holster of reinforced material that is sewn or otherwise permanently attached to the side of the pants within a side cargo pocket and is tightly secured to the leg of a wearer with flexible strap that is permanently attached to said holster, and wraps around the leg of a wearer through openings within the side pocket and subsequently re-attaches back on to the holster with velcro or like-material; a holster that is sewn within the side pocket; a pocket that is made with an outer covering that conceals the area of the holster from view with velcro, or like-material, along the inside edges of said covering allowing the wearer to rip or remove the entire covering in a hurried fashion for quick access to the handgun.
